An Overview of China's Adipic Acid Imports and Exports in 2018

2019-03-18

AA

PUdaily, Shanghai-- Customs data obtained by PUdaily shows that the volume of adipic acid imports has been decreasing over the past three years. In 2018, the import volume reached 14,664 tons, down 2.52%. It is expected that China's adipic acid imports will decline at the rate of around 5% in the next five years. It can be seen that the sources for China's adipic acid imports are limited. Obviously, South Korea and Germany are the two biggest sources, which combined account for about 95% of China's total imports. Customs data shows that the volume of adipic acid exports has been increasing over the past three years. In 2018, the export volume reached 346,589 tons, up 9.6%. It is expected that China's adipic acid exports will increase at the rate of about 4% in the next five years...More
